TWENTE REGION

As a vibrant city Enschede is located in the region of Twente, home to 627.000 inhabitants. Urban dynamics go hand in hand with serenity and nature. The total area of the region is more than 1503 km². This makes Twente the biggest city area in the Netherlands.

The inhabitants of the region Twente are called 'Twentenaren' or, more informal, 'Tukkers'. The region has a reputation as an area of scientific and economical innovation, due to the presence of the University of Twente. The (inter)national fame of local football club FC Twente among other things also adds to the positive reputation of the region.

These days Twente is seen as a pleasant and cosy region where one can find tranquillity, space and nature. It also offers a range of campings and bungalowparcs, making the tourist sector an important source of income for the region.

The region knows a cultural phenomenon known as 'noaberschap'. This means that neighbours play an important role during key events in life. Even in daily life a close relationship with your neighbours is important. From lending the traditional cup of sugar, to exchanging knowledge and advice. Therefore a good 'noaber' or neighbour is better than a far away friend (Dutch proverb).

In relationship to this, all the municipalities in the region of Twente work very close together in a collaboration called 'Regio Twente' (Twente Region) in the areas of traffic, transport, economic affairs, public health and tourism.

For more information visit the website of Regio Twente (www.regiotwente.nl/english).

CITY OF ENSCHEDE

With over 160,000 inhabitants, Enschede is the largest city in the east of the Netherlands. Around 30,000 students, are enrolled either at Saxion Hogeschool Enschede (Saxion University of Professional Education, Enschede), the Academy of Music, the Academy of Art, or the University of Twente. Enschede has a bit of everything. Around the Van Heekplein you can find a large number of boutiques, clothing stores and other shops. On the Oude Markt square you will find lots of places to have a coffee or go out for dinner. Enschede is a relatively quiet, safe and pleasant city to live and work in. Modern shopping facilities attract people from both the Dutch and German local region.

Enschede is worth discovering. Today Enschede is the urban city heart in the Eastern Netherlands and is home to 160.000 people. This is quite a difference from the 4.000 residents around the year 1860. Back then Enschede had a city canal and two gateways. The outlines of one of these gates is still visible in one of the oldest streets in the city; de Marktstraat (the Market Street). Even Enschede's own inhabitants pass this memorial stone every day without realising that the Veltpoort was once situated on that very spot.

In the 19th century Enschede developed a thriving textile industry eventually growing into the main textile producer in the Netherlands. This caused the population to grown fivefold between 1870 and 1900!

Burning and bombing

What's striking about Enschede is the lack of very old buildings. The city was a late bloomer in its development and stayed a relatively small town for quite some time. What adds to that are the many disasters that struck the city throughout its history. There were three city fires. The one that took place in 1862 had the most profound effect on the city. The entire city was burned to the ground, but remarkably only two people lost their lives.

During the WWII the bombs took their toll on Enschede. The Allied Forces often mistook Enschede for a German town they were supposed to bomb and unleashed their destruction on to Enschede. On top of that, the city council of Enschede quite rigorously knocked down buildings to make way for new developments. But if you look closely and know where to look, Enschede houses some real history and authenticity.

Bigwigs

An example of a historic building is Villa van Heek on de Oude Markt (the Old Market Square) built in 1870, also known as 'het huis met de stoep' (the house with the steps). According to labourers these steps were build to allow the bigwigs to look down on them. The big money in Enschede was earned between 1900 and 1930. Only a few decades ago, the posh van Heek ladies enjoyed their afternoon tea in the conservatory and now everyone in Enschede can enjoy a beer there!

Resilience

In the 1960's the collapse of the textile industry took place which proved another disaster in the development of Enschede. 85% of the labour force in Enschede was working in the textile industry. Despite this enormous setback, Enschede got back on it's feet. Just like it did after the fireworks disaster on the 13th of May 2000, where an entire neighbourhood was wiped off the map.

This resilience can be traced back to the mentality of the inhabitants of Enschede. It is a true workers city. In former times many immigrants came to this border town with nothing more than the clothes on their back, trying to find a job in poor working conditions, attempting to make a living for themselves.

With over 150 nationalities Enschede still embodies a international character in a friendly and informal atmosphere. As a newcomer, you will feel right at home.

The University of Twente (Dutch: Universiteit Twente, abbr. UT) is a public research university located in Enschede, Netherlands. It offers degrees in the fields of social sciences, exact sciences and is highly specialized in engineering. Entrepreneurial spirit is one of the core values of the institution and the university is committed to making economic and social contributions to the Netherlands, particularly the region of Enschede, the former powerhouse of the Dutch textile industry.

The UT collaborates with Delft University of Technology, Eindhoven University of Technology and the Wageningen University and Research Centre under the umbrella of 4TU and is also a partner in the European Consortium of Innovative Universities (ECIU). The UT is ranked 65th in the Reuters's 2017 European Most Innovative Universities, and, 153rd worldwide in 2018 according to the Times Higher Education magazine.

The university was founded in 1961 as Technische Hogeschool Twente. After Delft and Eindhoven, it was the third higher vocational institute of technology in the Netherlands to become a university. The institution was renamed to Universiteit Twente (University of Twente) in 1986. The Dutch government's decision to locate the university in Enschede, the main city of Twente, had much to do with the north-eastern province's rich industrial history. Another important consideration was the fact that the local economy needed a boost to compensate for the dwindling textile industry.

The University of Twente was built on the former country estate of Drienerlo, situated between Hengelo and Enschede. The 140-hectare estate consists of woodland, meadows and water. Architects Van Tijen and Van Embden designed the first — and so far only — Dutch campus university along American lines where students and staff live, work and pursue their leisure activities on campus. Through the years, several other important architects and artists have made their own contributions to the design of the campus.

Students and staff at the University of Twente continue to form an active academic community. The Student Union, which is run entirely by students, promotes the interests of all student societies and also manages several premises, including the student social centre in the heart of Enschede. Besides, over hundred sports, cultural, international, social and business associations are part of the student life in the University of Twente.

The current Rector of the university is Professor Thom Palstra, PhD. The other two members of the executive board are Mr. V. van der Chijs (President Executive Board) and Dr. W.D. Built-Spiering (Vice-President)
